The people of Thousand Oaks are not strangers to difficult and challenging times. We have risen time and time again to every call for help, every challenge and have answered with strength and dignity. Now is a time to come together in a way that is very different from anything we have experienced before.

The current public health situation is changing by the hour and the outcomes depend on every one of us. I ask you to be mindful of those around you who may need additional food or resources to weather this tumultuous time. We are monitoring the situation 24/7 and working with the County Health Department to share information as it becomes available. To protect everyone’s health, it is more important than ever to heed the guidelines that have been established.

There will be many opportunities to volunteer your time in a safe way that will benefit those who need it the most. Our City website is a great source of current information and ways to help. Let us be actively looking for those chances, no matter how small they seem. Today, I ask you to collaborate on ideas to best serve your neighbors and those most vulnerable in an act of solidarity in this uncertain time.

We will get through this together!
